

Social security coordination and platform work

Alberto Barrio

University of Copenhagen

Legal Studies in Welfare and Market (WELMA) centre

Reshaping Work and Welfare in the Digital Age (WorkWel) research project (No 118164)

Social security coordination and platform work: an introduction

- Platform work: Nature, features and challenges brought by it
- Are the Coordination Regulations ready to face non-standard work (and, particularly, platform work)?

Challenges for the determination of the legislation applicable as it regards platform workers

- Challenges related to platform workers' often uncertain employment status

- Challenges related to the Coordination Regulations' prioritisation of the Standard Employment Relationship

Challenges related to platform workers' uncertain employment status

- Uncertainty concerning platform workers' employment status at national level
- The Coordination Regulations' dependence on national notions of employment and self-employment
- Consequences
- Future potential avenues

Challenges related to the Coordination Regulations' prioritisation of the Standard Employment Relationship

- Do the Coordination Regulations prioritise employment activities over self-employment activities?
- Do the Coordination Regulations prioritise 'stable' work situations?

Conclusions

- Platform work brings challenges, but also opportunities
- If the Coordination Regulations are to be applied equally to all forms of work, some adaptations may be advisable

